Key Activation through a client application

Serial key activation can occur in several ways. You can either manually register a serial key, let the client app submit the machine code or create a web interface where the machine code has to be submitted. Since the entire procedure is based on web requisites, you can activate a key on any platform and device. In this example, we are to use a library that already contains these methods for .NET applications. It is open source, so you can also include it into your own application directly (download here).

In order to activate a key, you will have to add SKM as a reference or include the code into your application. Once this is done, you should obtain the values of pid, uid, hsum, sid and mid. These values can be found here: <http://serialkeymanager.com/Key/ProductValidation>.

Now, in C#, if everything works out the way it should, the activationResult variable should be true if you have allowed at least one activation of the key.

```
1 string machineCode = SKGL.SKM.getMachineCode(SKGL.SKM.getEightByteHash());
2
3 string keyToValidate = "XXXXXX-XXXXXX-XXXXXX-XXXXXX";
4
5 bool activationResult = SKGL.SKM.KeyActivation("pid","uid","hsum", keyToValidate, machineCode);
```
